

Membership hits an all time high

More than 5,000 individuals and 300 organisations now actively involved

Membership of the Institute is at an all time high, with 5,000+ Individual members and 300+ charities now actively involved.

Lindsay Boswell, Chief Executive of the Institute of Fundraising, says:

In these challenging times, membership of your professional body has never been more relevant. The fact that we have more members than ever before reflects the value our members place on the support and services we provide.

As a fundraiser it is not necessarily money which motivates you - but you spend most of your day chasing it. We can help you make the chase a little easier.

By becoming a member of the Institute you will become part of a huge community of over 5000 fundraising professionals, all benefitting from support, advice, networking and development opportunities.

A new direct route means that those with at least five year's experience in fundraising can join the Institute as a full member.

Lindsay Boswell continues:

Now, more than ever, fundraisers need to be seen to be professional and committed to do their jobs. Membership is a visible mark of that professionalism.
